

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A conductor pattern is constructed to prevent corners from peeling and raising off a substrate. The conductor pattern has a spiral configuration and includes straight lines and corners connected to the straight lines. The bottom surface cross-sectional width of the conductor pattern is smaller than the top surface cross-sectional width thereof. Moreover, the bottom surface cross-sectional width of the corner is larger than the bottom surface cross-sectional width of the straight line.